MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Training

Rod:

The variety of learning experiences, coupled with the academic environment of the Industrial College, adds up to a broadening and enlightening experience which I believe very definitely enhanced my career and increased my value to the Agency.

I am not familiar with the current curriculum, however, during the 1970 school year I found the core courses and computer-based games considerably more effective than the foundation courses which were somewhat too broad based in their approach. The World Politics Simulation, for example, was particularly interesting in that it provided an insight into decision-making in the international political environment.

It is my opinion that the peak of usefulness for attendance at the Industrial College is between ages 39-42 and around the GS-14 level.
